

New Kuranda clobber a hit

Kuranda Information Centre volunteers Aleisha, manager Cathy, Christel, and Robyn model their new look and distinctive apparel which has been locally produced.

VOLUNTEERS at the Kuranda Information Centre have undergone a makeover courtesy of newly-released corporate clothing.

The unique apparel is the work of volunteer and creative artist Beverley Adamson who designed a tropical print incorporating a green tree frog.

Ms Anderson screen printed the design herself on white or green shirts.

Kuranda Information Centre manager Catherine Harvey said the work was sponsored through the Kuranda Koala Gardens from commissions earned by the volunteers over the past year.

Kuranda Village Promotion Program chairman Fr Chris Wright said the distinctive new image would make hard-working information staff even more noticeable among the Kuranda community.

“Our Kuranda Information Centre people see a great percentage of the almost 900,000 visitors who visit the township and environs every year. The centre management and volunteers serve visitors to our unique location with valuable information and friendly service standards that are unequalled throughout the region, so it is fitting that they will now be more easily identified,” he said.
